Annual Report FYE 2012

Mission Statement

The David Owsley Museum of Art cultivates lifelong learning and recreation in the visual arts through its collection of original works of art, engaging exhibitions, and educational programs for the university community and other diverse audiences.

As adopted by the
Ball State University Board of Trustees
December 19, 2008

Director's Foreword

A change of the name of the Ball State University Museum of Art to the David Owsley Museum of Art was approved by the Ball State University Board of Trustees at their July 2011 meeting. The change was celebrated at a dinner at the museum on October 6, 2011, attended by over one hundred friends, benefactors, Ball family members, and, of course, the honoree, David T. Owsley. On that occasion, Dr. Neil Harris, the Preston and Sterling Morton Professor Emeritus in the Departments of History and Art History at the University of Chicago, gave a brief survey of the history of American university museums and their evolution from repositories, to monuments to their donors, to institutions engaged with their larger communities. His address signaled the importance embodied in the name change. David Owsley's constant nurture of this museum for the past fifty years was acknowledged by President Gora and the Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Hollis E. Hughes, Jr., who read a proclamation from the Board of Trustees.

A name change to an institution can signify change on many levels. In this case, it acknowledges a donor who has been instrumental in creating the persona of this museum through the consistent development of its collection for over a half century. A search for "Owsley" in the donor field of the museum's collection database will yield over two thousand records. By simple quantitative measure, this is numerically well over 20 percent of the museum's collection. Qualitatively, the search result is impossible to characterize briefly. The Owsley gifts begin in 1963 and range from tiny ancient artifacts to very large contemporary paintings. At Ball State, the David T. Owsley Gallery of Ethnographic Art was dedicated in his honor in 1978 to recognize his magnificent gifts of African, pre-Columbian Mesoamerican, Pacific Island, and Native American art. In 1989 he received the Ball State University President's Medal of Distinction. Mr. Owsley received an honorary degree in 2005. He has been closely allied with many other academic and cultural institutions in the United States. He is also a benefactor of the Dallas Museum of Art, where a suite of galleries that exhibit arts from Southeast Asia was named in his honor in 2003.

A boundless curiosity about the world's material culture, coupled with the eye of a connoisseur, makes the word eclectic more than a little inadequate as a descriptor for Owsley's collection. In an era of extreme specialization in virtually every field of endeavor, not excluding art history, David T. Owsley may be a throwback to another time where the expertise of a connoisseur was a quality to be cultivated and admired. In addition to possessing those skills, David Owsley is a scholar who has an academic knowledge at his command acquired first at New York University's Institute of Fine Arts and later as a fellow at the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, where he studied sculpture, furniture, and ceramics.

David T. Owsley shares a genetic propensity with his grandfather, Frank C. Ball, to acquire works of art. Frank Ball was certain that there needed to be a gallery for fine arts in Muncie, Indiana, and he purchased paintings in size and numbers far beyond his ability to house them in a domestic interior. Mr. Owsley's grandfather's art collection was supplemented by those of his uncles and aunts, George A. and Frances Ball, Edmund Burke Ball and his wife, Bertha Crosley Ball; and his cousins Edmund F. and Virginia Ball, E. Arthur Ball, Elisabeth Ball, and Lucina Ball Moxley, and these have come together at the Ball State University. There are, of course, other members of the family who have contributed to this museum as well, making it the Ball families' most personal legacy to the university and this community.

The nature of David Owsley's interest in art is that of a generalist, represented by the diversity of works of art integrated into the collection. There is no area of the collection in which Owsley's unerring taste and enormous appetite for art are not visible. Glance at the works of art on view in galleries housing medieval sculpture, Renaissance and Baroque paintings, French paintings, sculpture, and decorative arts, nineteenth-century French and American sculpture, and decorative art from examples of the highest-style French Art Deco to a Farberware centerpiece, and you will find Owsley's name. He has furnished representative collections of the arts of ancient China, the Indian subcontinent and Southeast Asia. We are grateful for this visual feast. It informs every aspect of humanistic endeavor represented by this great university. His gifts are a constant reminder of the artist's will to organize into an expressive and meaningful form our experiences as human beings. We are profoundly grateful to David Owsley and proud to bear his name institutionally.

MANAGEMENT AND PLANNING

Capital Fund Projects

Planning for expanded galleries for Asian art and ethnographic art on the second floor of the Fine Arts Building contiguous with existing museum galleries proceeded throughout the past year. The firm Ratio Architects Inc. of Indianapolis, John Hartlep project leader, was selected as the design team that also includes Circle Design Group, HVAC engineers, and George Sexton Associates, of Washington, D.C., and London, for lighting design. The project is being coordinated by Tanner Jordan, assistant director, Ball State Facilities Planning. Charles Froom Design is the designer for the reinstallation. The expansion will convert about 7,500 square feet at the extreme east and west ends of the second floor within the existing footprint of the Fine Arts Building to museum use.

Impetus for the project was the fact that the size of the museum's collection had long exceeded available gallery space. In particular, works of art from Africa, pre-Columbian Mesoamerica, native North American art, and the arts of the Pacific Islands had been installed in the David Owsley Gallery of Ethnographic Art. Because of the numbers of works installed there, the gallery was difficult to navigate by groups; it was impossible for a single class of students and instructor to have access to the same work of art during a guided museum visit. These 1,369 square feet will be converted to the new interior museum entrance from the north that will open at the head of the stairs to the foyer on Riverside Avenue. The museum's small collection of European and Middle Eastern Neolithic cultures and ancient Mediterranean cultures will be moved to this new entrance, a fitting beginning point for a museum visit.

As a result of relocating Asian art to the east wing and ancient Mediterranean cultures to the new entrance gallery, a parallel project will be to repurpose the galleries on the third floor, northwest corner, for newly conceived Design and Decorative Arts galleries. We have been working with Davira Taragin, consultative curator of Design/Decorative Arts, for the past year who, with Bill Zack, associate professor of Art, will develop a plan to utilize the four connected galleries.

Fundraising: Capital Campaign for Expansion*

The museum's $5M campaign, part of the Ball State Bold campaign, achieved a reduced goal of $3.6M. This will be used for expansion into the east and west wings on the second floor of the Fine Arts Building, which will add 7,500 square feet of exhibition space for existing collections of ethnographic art and Asian art.

EDUCATION AND OUTREACH

The educational services of the David Owsley Museum of Art consist of various high-quality educational experiences for public impact to broaden knowledge and understanding of the collection and the museum for students, faculty, and staff on campus as well as community members from the city, county, and region. The strategic plans of the university and museum guide our activities, as does the Muncie Action Plan for the city, together focusing on access and awareness while affirming a vibrant and integrated university community.

Teaching and Academic Programs

At its core, the Museum of Art uses its art collection as a cultural context, conceptual framework, primary text, and creative focal point for offering skill building in visual literacy and critical thinking. Group visits led by museum staff and docents, 127 in all, were provided for professors and students from all seven of Ball State's academic colleges. Examples include a focus on the family in art for the Honors College freshman class; the economics of art and visual analysis; nonverbal communication; costume history; and foodways in history and art. Many professors bring their students to the Museum of Art and lead their own class activities and discussions, e.g. the Art Department for art history and drawing, and the College of Architecture and Planning for freshman studio drawing. CAP freshman also studied paintings in the museum's collection this year and translated them into three-dimensional spaces.

Docent Learning Program

The Docent Learning Program recruited nine new docents in the fall and eight new docents in the spring, resulting in thirty-one active docents in total. The docent ratio of students to community members is 3:1. The student docents are mostly public history, art history, art, theater, and anthropology majors, and community members are typically current or former professors and teachers. Docents attend weekly training during the fall and spring semesters that focuses on learning about the museum and its collection, art and art history, audiences, and gallery teaching methods. Some students register for training and enroll in the class format for credit. Two students participated in the program for credit: Jordan Thomas (fall 2011) and Madisen Basey (spring 2012).

Three Ball State University undergraduates were selected for internships and special projects at the Museum of Art. They were interns Leo Patros, history major, "Highlights of the Collection for the Community"; Kristen Vincenty, anthropology major, "Re-Exhibiting Pre-Columbian Art"; and Brittany Yoder, art major, "Investigating African Metalwork."

BSU Museum Club

The BSU Museum Club was officially recognized as a Ball State University student club. They are a club interested in all museums for personal interest and future careers. Museum of Art staff member Tania Said is the faculty advisor. The culminating activity was a trip to the Indianapolis Museum of Art to meet artist Brian McCutcheon and view his midcareer retrospective and to meet BSU alumna and former Museum of Art docent Stefanie Clark to discuss education and careers for the new and emerging museum professional.

Teacher and School Programs

- The docents and staff led dozens of school tours for area children, including public, private, charter, and multigrade classes (elementary to high school) from seventeen school districts in eleven counties.
- The special initiative Look to Learn—focusing on art, critical thinking, and language—continues in collaboration with Burris Laboratory School and Ball State Teachers College as partners. To date, three grades composed of 120 students have participated, viewing and discussing two dozen works of art last year. They visited the Museum of Art twice, and seven training sessions were provided to teachers resulting in twelve teachers knowing the Visual Thinking Strategies teaching method and customized curriculum. Look to Learn is also the subject of various qualitative and quantitative studies to evaluate the project's effectiveness and suitability for implementation in area schools. The results are expected in fall 2012.
- The teacher training workshop "An Introduction to Visual Thinking Strategies" was offered in collaboration and with funding from the Art Education Association of Indiana to art teachers from the region.
- Publication of the Latin American Art and Culture educational packet, geared to secondary students, was completed with review and expertise from seven area teachers of art, Spanish, and language arts. It is the fifth educational packet produced by the Museum of Art for teachers and students; other topics include African art, Native American art, and art in America.
- The Museum of Art produced its first Educational Program Brochure, which has been mailed to all area schools.

Community Outreach and Service

The David Owsley Museum of Art Alliance is a membership organization that raises funds for the Museum of Art through their financial support of programs and museum activities. Nine programs were produced for the seventy-three members and friends, including a trip to the Indianapolis Museum of Art to meet the members of the IMA Alliance membership group.

Special community group tours included alumni, parents of incoming freshman, and summer community outreach programs—for instance, Great Achievers and Summer Advantage from the Muncie Public Library, and the Buley Center after-school program. Special off-site staff and volunteer community presentations included a series of six programs for Westminster Village, a retirement community in Muncie; the Muncie Art Students League; and the Association of Lifelong Learners.

The Museum of Art's volunteer corps is an active group of docents and members of the Alliance and Friends Executive Committee, an advisory group drawn from the membership. In FYE 2012, docents contributed 845 hours, and Alliance officers and members' effort resulted in 104 hours (32 [8 programs x 4 members x 1 hour] + 72 [9 programs x 4 officers x 2 hours]).

Professional service by Tania Said, director of education, included completing a three-year term for the Museum Education Roundtable, joining the board of the Art Education Association of Indiana, and reviewing articles for the Journal of Museum Education.

Museum and Educational Program Research and Planning

The Museum of Art engaged in a rigorous interpretive planning process in preparation for expanded galleries and public space. Planning included conducting eight meetings of various audience groups and stakeholders of the Museum of Art with consultant Myriam Springuel, The Museum Group. The meetings were with Museum of Art members, faculty, staff, teachers, students, docents, and other community organizations over two days, followed by an off-site meeting at Motivate Our Minds in Muncie.

Museum staff visited five other midwestern art museums to benchmark best practices in museum interpretation and to determine space needs for programs and other functions. . The museums studied included Ohio's Allen Memorial Art Museum at Oberlin College and Cleveland Museum of Art and Michigan's Cranbrook Art Museum in Bloomfield Hills, Detroit Institute of Arts, and University of Michigan Museum of Art in Ann Arbor. The resulting interpretive plan will guide space allocation and development of interpretive planning tools in the Museum of Art. The plan has been initiated to anticipate further expansion of the Museum of Art in service to this region.

Public Programs

In FYE 2012, the Museum of Art offered fifty programs composed of docent-led scheduled public tours, interviews with artists and other experts from around the country, films, and more for BSU students, faculty, and staff and the community. New programs included a book club in partnership with Muncie Public Library, which focused on Dr. Gail Levin's book Lee Krasner: A Biography in preparation for the author's visit later that same month; the weekly drop-in program "Sketching in the Museum," in collaboration with the BSU Fine Arts Club; and drop-in "Docent's Choice" tours starting in the summer. The "First Person" program expanded to include live interviews and discussions with experts using Internet videoconferencing and assistance from BSU Unified Technology Support; the selected inaugural program interviewees were artists Aurora Robson and Pat Steir, who are represented in the collection; and art historian Polly Nordstrand, Ph.D. candidate, Cornell University.

Family programming

Family programming included a summer afternoon featuring kid-friendly tours and programs highlighting the collection, and the Arts and Music Festival on the Green, in collaboration with the Muncie Symphony Orchestra and Muncie Arts and Culture Council.

By the Numbers:

- 193 groups visited the museum in FYE 2012.
 - 1 out of 6 visitors comes to the Museum of Art as part of a group; i.e., through schools, university classes, etc.
 - 845 hours were donated by docents.
 - $15,243.80 is the value of hours donated by docents (according to Independent Sector).
 - 50 public programs were offered.

Aurora Robson: Be Like Water

Sculpture Court

Saturday, April 16, 2011, through August 5, 2012

Canadian-born New York artist Aurora Robson has installed the sculpture Be Like Water in the museum's sculpture court, suspended from the skylight. Robson, a dedicated environmentalist, has gleaned her material from the refuse stream in the form of plastic water bottles to call attention, poetically, to environmental disaster caused by trash.

*The museum's special exhibition galleries were closed for construction December 2011 until September 2013.

Aspects of American Painting: the 1970s
Special Exhibition Galleries No. 1 and No. 2
Friday May 20, 2011, through Sunday, August 28, 2011

The photographic image, minimalism, conceptual art, experimental film and video, sound works, earthworks, and performance art were, from a critical point of view, edging painting to the periphery of the central concerns of the art world of the 1970s in New York. Again and again, influential avant-garde journals declared that painting was dead. The hegemony of formalist critic Clement Greenberg—the champion of abstract expressionism and the color field art that aired acres of raw canvas that followed—was through.

But the variety of paintings made in the decade of the late '60s and 1970s by independent-minded artists is evidence that the funeral announcement was premature. This selection from the museum's collection includes artists who pursued their careers outside New York, such as Charles Pollock (1902–1988), who worked in Michigan and then Paris with only a brief stop in New York (1968–71); Stanley Boxer (b. 1926) and Walter Darby Bannard (b. 1934), whose work was variously called color field, postpainterly abstraction, or lyrical abstraction; Joan Snyder (b. 1940), the pioneer of neo-expressionism; and Irving Kriesberg (1919–2009), the quintessential outsider, an independent painter of walking figures in an era of nonobjectivism. Katherine Porter's (b. 1941) large canvas, Chalatenango, 1980, begins to engage world politics.

Although they were exhibited in Chicago in the 1960s, the Chicago imagists were put onto a world stage in London at the Whitechapel Art Gallery in 1972. This selection from the museum collection includes work by Philip Hanson (b. 1943), Christina Ramberg (1946–1995), Ed Paschke (1939–2004), and Barbara Rossi (b. 1940). Their work is personal, quirky, and influenced by surrealism and the comics. Unlike the New York pop artists, who remained archly aloof from their commercially derived subjects, the imagists reveled in their subjects.

Seen at a remove of thirty-plus years, the tradition of painting as a means of personal expression and the vitality of experimental vocabularies of these artists provide a satisfying, if selective, look at the art of this decade. Not yet history, but not of the moment either, these paintings remain as engaging if not as disturbing as they were when first encountered. Considering the longevity of these artists' careers, their relevance to the history of art seems assured. The high proportion of women artists included even in this small selection as mainstream painters of the decade could not have happened ten years earlier, when painting/criticism/commercial representation was the province of white males. The '70s ushered in a new era.

Gorham 1880–1910: The Glory Years
Selections from the Don and Lois Norris Collection
Special Exhibition Galleries No. 1 and No. 2
Friday, September 16, through November 27, 2011
Preview, Thursday, September 15, 5:00 to 7:00

This is an exhibition of over sixty examples of silver hollowware and flatware manufactured by Gorham Mfg. Company between the years 1880 and 1910. The exhibition is drawn from the collection of Don and Lois Norris.

Between 1872 and World War I, the price of silver raw material dropped continually. Nevertheless, it was an ebullient era, a gilded age where silver was within reach of a society taking its place in the world. Gorham was on top of its game, making inventive hollowware as well as flatware to serve myriad new uses. World trade made things like tropical fruit available year-round, necessitating new, appropriate serving utensils. Ice and ice cream similarly needed new forms of silver to serve them. Tableware was never so complicated.

The fashion for new design motifs during this period is unparalleled. Exotic influences from the Middle East and the Far East, naturalism, and the French-influenced art nouveau were all incorporated into this extravagantly inventive period of American silver manufacture, nowhere better than by Gorham.

AQUATINTS

Brown Study Room

Friday, September 16, through December 31, 2011

Preview, Thursday, September 15, 2011, 5:00 to 7:00

This exhibition is a selection of thirty prints made in the aquatint medium, which was codified in the mid-eighteenth century and adopted to imitate the tonality found in wash drawings and watercolors. Duplicating the freshness of a drawing and watercolor was a quest of printmakers since the early 1500s. Aquatint is a technique that, although invented earlier, was used extensively by some of the most inventive artists/printmakers from the nineteenth century through today. Francisco Goya was the master of all time in using aquatint dramatically in his long series of satirical prints known as the Capriccios.

Included in this selection are works by François-Philippe Charpentier and his Swedish student Per Gustaf Floding, who are credited with standardizing the technique. Other early adopters included François Boucher and Jean-Claude Richard, the Abbé de Saint-Non. Francisco Goya, Picasso, and contemporary artists Paula Rego, Kiki Smith, Amy Wilson are represented among others. Professor Sarojini Johnson was the guest curator for this exhibition.

Notable Acquisitions

Portrait of Francis Basset, 1777

Sir Joshua Reynolds

British, 1723–1792

Oil on canvas, 50 X 40 inches

Purchase: The Frank C. Ball Collection, gift of the Ball Brothers Foundation by exchange assisted by David T. Owsley via the Alconda Owsley Foundation

2011.006.000

The sitter, Francis Basset, was a student at King's College, Cambridge University, when he had his third Joshua Reynolds portrait done in London. The scholar is commemorated here by his academic robe and mortarboard, similar to regalia still in use today. Basset went on to become a politician and make his fortune in mining. Along with rival Thomas Gainsborough, Sir Joshua Reynolds was the most significant portrait painter of his time. He was a founder member and the first president of the Royal Academy in London. In 1769, he said:

Invention, strictly speaking, is little more than a new combination of those images which have been previously gathered and deposited in the memory; nothing can come of nothing.

Freize Number Four, 1994

John Coplans

American, born England 1920 - 2003

Silver gelatin prints, three panels each measuring 74 X 23 inches, 74 X 69 inches overall

Purchase: Ball Brothers Foundation Legacy Endowment for the Museum

2011.007.000a-c

John Coplans began photographing his own body at age fifty-eight. This continued for the next twenty-five years. Introducing his book about the work, titled A Body, Coplans had the following to say:

I photograph my body. I generalize it by beheading myself to make my body more like any other man's. Nakedness removed the body from the specificity of time; unclothed, it belongs to the past, present, and future. It is classless, without country, unencumbered by language, and free to wander across cultures at will.

He was active in the United States from 1960 as a painter, a museum director at Pasadena and later Akron, Ohio, and as the founding editor of the influential Art Forum magazine. He is best remembered today for his self-portraits, which are the collections of many American museums. Frieze IV is among the most ambitious of his works.

Watkins Glen, New York, 1931
Clarence Carter
American, 1904–2000
Watercolor, 14 ½ X 21 ½ inches
Purchase: Friends of the Museum Fund
2011.012.000

Ohio native Clarence Carter left an indelibly personal take on the years of the Great Depression in America. His landscapes were not always as devoid of people as this one is. Here, the railroad switching mechanism and light signal take up the role of people as if visitors from another planet full of mysterious purpose in their unexplained dialogue. Carter's paintings of the commonplace often have an unsettling surrealist quality. Watkins Glen, New York adds to the museum's rich collection of watercolors from the first half of the twentieth century.

St. Jerome, 1596
Hendrick Goltzius
Dutch, Haarlem, 1558 - 1617
Engraving, 16 ½ X 11 inches

Purchase: Friends Fund
2012.006.002

St. Jerome, about 1596
Agostino Carracci
Italian, Bologna, 1557 - 1602
Engraving, 8 15/16 X 6 5/8 inches
deGrazia Bohlin 205
Purchase: Friends Fund
2012.006.001

These two Saint Jerome prints represent a clash of cultures: when the greatest of the Dutch printmakers made his way to Italy at the end of the sixteenth century and adopted a classicizing tendency of the Carracci Academy in Bologna, just as the Italian Agostino Carracci was affected by Goltzius's muscular swelling line to define anatomy.

Al Dolo, about 1743

Canaletto

Italian, Venice, 1697-1768

Etching, 11 x 16.75 inches

Bromberg 4 II/III

Purchase: 75th Anniversary Gala Fund assisted by the Museum of Art Alliance
2012.020.000

Canaletto's inventive way of describing atmosphere by series of almost parallel lines evoked the shimmer of heat rising off water as no other artist had ever accomplished. This early state of this image is the classic example of the great Venetian view maker's thoroughly original prints. Al Dolo is the port of entry onto the canal through which all commercial goods reached Venice from the mainland.

The acquisition is the remainder of the 75th Anniversary Gala celebration, a celebratory and fundraising project of the museum's Alliance members.

Loans to the Collection

Anticipating the reinstallation of the Asian and ethnographic collections in 2013, two hundred thirty-two works of art were received from David T. Owsley to enhance these presentations. Among them are concentrations of works of art from sub-Saharan Africa and ancient China. Several works from this loan are illustrated below, designated by the L2012.003 sequence.

Portrait Bust of Pierre-Laurent Buirette de Belloy, 1771

Jean-Jacques Caffieri

French, 1725-1792

Terra cotta, 30 inches high

David T. Owsley Collection

L2012.002.000

Buirette de Belloy was a French dramatist and actor. He was admitted to the Académie Française in 1772, to this day the only actor so honored. A marble version of Caffieri's bust has been ensconced in the Comédie-Française in Paris since it was made in 1771. The artist comes from an extended family of artists and craftsmen working in the high-style manner of the ancient régime. Nevertheless, de Belloy's intelligence and wit are evident in this very modern portrait.

Argillite,
David T. Owsley Collection
L2012.001.000

This is an exceptionally large piece of the brittle shale-like stone argillite, which is found only on Queen Charlotte Island off the coast of British Columbia. The Bear Creation Myth is an early example of Native American ingenuity using their own rich cultural themes in their carvings destined for trade with seamen and colonials.
