National Journalism Writing Award

Jeff Seidel

Detroit Free Press

The National Journalism Writing Award recognizes excellence in storytelling. The focus of this award is on outstanding writing, a skill critical to informing and connecting people across the globe.

Jeff Seidel has spent more than 27 years at the Detroit Free Press, building a body of work defined by his narrative reporting and an ability to find the human heart of complex stories. Seidel specializes in immersive human-interest journalism, often spending months or even a year following subjects to tell full, nuanced stories that challenge easy answers and honor lived experience.

His multi-year reporting on Amedy Dewey, an individual who survived an act of violence that transformed her life, exemplifies this approach. Seidel's coverage moves beyond the event itself to trace recovery, the often-fractured path of healing and the quiet resilience of people rebuilding their lives. Those stories model journalism's capacity not just to inform, but to deepen public understanding and restore dignity to those whose lives become public narratives.

Alongside his features, Seidel has produced sports coverage and major-event reporting, including assignments at three Olympic Games. His work has been recognized with prestigious honors, including a National Headliner Award, three Livingston Award finalist nods, and four Associated Press Sports Editors (APSE) awards, placing him among the nation's top writers in both feature and column categories. Across every beat, Seidel's prose is notable for its clarity, compassion and craft.

Majeri Award for Innovation and Leadership in Graphic Journalism

Denise M. Reagan

The 5 & Dime Theatre Co.

The Majeri Award recognizes innovation and leadership in the profession of graphic journalism and for creating a body of work or a singular piece that demonstrates innovation in news design or graphics reporting. This award is named for Anton Majeri Jr., a former senior editor for design and graphics at the Chicago Tribune. Under Majeri's leadership, the Chicago Tribune won more than 100 awards for design and graphic excellence from the Society for News Design.

This award recognizes photographers who have used their cameras to accurately and carefully document the action of the courtroom. The winning entry demonstrates the use of this communication tool in what is a highly sensitive area. As a founder of the National Press Photographers Association, Joseph Costa, who taught in Ball State's School of Journalism and Strategic Communication in the 1970s and 1980s, was one of the first to fight for the photographer's right to be in the courtroom, and it is his pioneering spirit that lives on in this award.

John R. Emens Award
for Support of a Free Student Press

Betsy Meyer
The Agency at Cardinal Media

This award recognizes a college or university administrator who has demonstrated support of a free student press on their campus. The award is named in honor of Dr. John R. Emens, president of Ball State University from 1945 to 1968. President Emens supported the concept of a free student press on the Ball State campus. As a national leader among higher education administrators, he encouraged others to support a free press at their campuses as well.

Students are recognized at the annual Louie Awards for their hard work and dedication to the fields of journalism and strategic communication.

Navbahor Imamova is a leading journalist on Central Asian geopolitics and development whose reporting has connected audiences in information-scarce regions with authoritative, on-the-ground coverage for more than two decades. A Ball State graduate (M.A. '03), Imamova helped launch Voice of America's (VOA) Uzbek television programming in 2003 and has since anchored, produced, and reported editions of the weekly program Amerika Manzaralari, over a thousand episodes that blend news, analysis, and service journalism for Uzbek-speaking audiences.

Imamova's work stands out for its mix of regional expertise and groundbreaking access. She is the first and only U.S. journalist accredited to report from inside Uzbekistan, offering firsthand coverage of political transitions, social change and daily life in a country otherwise closed to outside media. Her reporting has revealed the complexities of human experience across Central Asia, translating those dynamics for U.S. and international audiences.

Driven by her belief in journalism as a public service, Imamova uses VOA and other platforms to bridge the gap between policy and people, making geopolitical shifts understandable and personal stories visible. Her work has earned her recognition as a leading voice both inside the region and in global discussions about Central Asia's present and future.

Detroit Public Radio

Quinn Klinefelter is a seasoned radio journalist and editor whose reporting and anchoring have shaped civic conversation across Detroit and beyond. A Ball State alumnus ('86) who earned an M.A. from the University of Missouri, Columbia, Klinefelter brings nearly three decades of experience to his role as host and Senior News Editor at 101.9 WDET. He anchors midday newscasts and prepares reports heard on WDET as well as partner outlets, including NPR and the BBC.

Klinefelter's journalism centers on government and politics, and his reporting has included interviews with numerous presidential candidates, multiple Michigan governors and every Detroit mayor elected in the 21st century. That depth of access reflects both his institutional knowledge of Michigan politics and a reputation for fair, rigorous questioning.

His work has earned more than fifty awards from organizations such as CBS Radio, the Associated Press, the Wisconsin Broadcast Association, the Michigan Association of Broadcasters, and the Society of Professional Journalists, a testimony to his range and sustained excellence across beats and formats. Whether anchoring a midday newscast, producing an investigative segment, or crafting a field report, Klinefelter combines clarity, context, and a steady newsroom ethic that informs listeners and strengthens public discourse.

SJSC students involved with student media cover events in the community, keeping Muncie residents informed.

Emerging Media Design and Development students frequently collaborate with community partners on projects, such as the Remnant Trust, gaining real world experience and opportunities.
