

Rachel Ivie (she/her) is a rising actor from western Kentucky and is currently in her final year of completing a BFA in Acting at Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana. She started performing at a very young age at the D'alto Studio of Performing Arts in Evansville, Indiana and has been following her dream ever since. Always interested in the absurd and radical, Rachel aspires to explore and create stories that challenge what we know about ourselves and the world we live in. Throughout her years studying theatre academically, she has found great importance in what the human body can create artistically when telling a story. Rachel passionately desires to explore new and relevant work collaboratively with diverse ensembles who share a common belief in the art form. Being a female artist from a small town, she hopes that her work can inspire younger generations that feel as if they don't have outlets for their creativity and passions.
